APPENDICES

APPENDIX 1 Earthquakes

Cyprus is in the second seismic zone that is extended from the Atlantic Ocean lengthwise to the Mediterranean basin through Italy, Greece, Turkey, Persia, India and the Pacific Ocean. The island's seismic effect is rendered by the present of the 'Cypriot Arc' in the eastern Mediterranean region; the tectonic limit between the African and Eurasian lithospheric plate.

Historians and excavations give evidence of the destructive effect of the several earthquakes in Cyprus through the centuries. There were at least 16 earthquakes between 26BC and 1900 AC, above 8 degrees in the Mercalli scale and 30 between 1500-1900 severe earthquakes (Krambis, 1997:125, 128).

Earthquakes in the period 1191-1571

In the medieval period the most severe earthquakes struck in 1183, 1222 and 1491. Paphos had very severe earthquakes during the Frankish period. In 1222, many buildings were destroyed; the Castle in 'Saranta Kolones', the Cathedral and the Port. Nicosia and Limassol were also affected. Another strong earthquake on the 28.1.1577 is referred by Leontios Machairas (MKE, Vol.12: 172, 174, 176).

The most severe earthquakes between 1191-1571 and their impact were:

1157	Severe earthquake (Jakovlevic, 1997:18)
1183	Fifteen churches were ruined in Paphos.
1222 (May)	Destructions in Limassol and Paphos. The fort of Paphos was destroyed and a huge sea seismic wave followed. Nicosia was also affected.
25.4.1491	Earthquake that effected the Messaoria and Nicosia; part of St.Sophia Cathedral collapsed. Destructions happened in other cities as well.
25.4.1567	A series of earthquakes affected Limassol area.

Earthquakes in the period 1571-1961

The most severe earthquakes between 1571-1900:

28.1.1577	Some 140 earthquakes in 15 days. Ruins in Limassol.
10.12.1718	Ruins in Nicosia.
1735 Dec.	Ruins in Famagusta, and elsewhere. The city Cathedral collapsed.
29.1.1896	Severe damages in Limassol, Episkopi, Akrotiri.
5.1.1900	Ruins in Nicosia.
20.1.1941	Earthquake affected Paralimni, Famagusta and Nicosia. It also affected Egypt, Lebanon, Israel, Turkey.
1953	In Paphos, many villages were ruined.
15.9.1961	All over the island, damage in Famagusta and Larnaka.

Notes:

1. italics: refer to monuments in the Turkish occupied area

2. Bold: refer to monuments that are dated in the period 1191-1571, but are not part of this PhD because these are either Medieval Gothic, or are not churches. A small number of towers, and bridges that are included in this research belong to the Vernacular style. These are studied for their construction technology and materials, which are similar to those in the churches, the author considers.

3.Undelined monuments are not 'Listed Monuments' by the Department of Antiquities but are 'Listed' by the author.

APPENDIX 3

Table2-Architectural styles and types, construction materials and structural condition of the Post-Byzantine churches (Maps 1-7).

This table was prepared by the author. The information of the churches' names and their location was based on the List of Monuments, Department of Antiquities (1998, 2000), and the chronology was based on the literature. The information on the typology, the construction materials and the structural condition were based on the author's visits to the monuments.

*=monasterial church
?=not visited or no information available to the author.
italics indicate that the church (and sometimes the town or village) is in the occupied area (Northen Cyprus)
Note 1: A number of churches have been altered several times, but not all the alterations have survived. Those that have not survived are not included in these lists.
Note 2: A number of the above were built as Post-Byzantine Byzantine style churches in the period 10th-14th centuries, but later underwent a change in style, changing to Post-Byzantine Franco-Byzantine style.
Note 3: The dimensions of the timber roof churches of the 15th-16th century were taken from Fereos and Papageorgiou.
